Weekly Newsletter on International Health Policies

"International Health Policies in the News" is a weekly newsletter that provides articles from the journal "The Lancet" and other sources related to international health policies in low and middle income countries. Published every Friday, IHP News focuses on global health initiatives, global public goods, aid effectiveness in the health sector, and also ground-breaking articles in specific domains like AIDS and Malaria.

IHP News is published as a blog at www.itg.be/ihp. Readers can also subscribe to the newsletter by sending an email to ihpnetwork@itg.be. Readers can choose to receive the English version, as well as a digest in French (published several days after the English version).

The 4 March 2011 edition of IHP News contains articles on (among other things) U.S. funding for the Global Health Initiative; the “benefits of recession”; and the Multilateral AID Review by the (U.K.) Department for International Development (also covered in this issue of GFO – see previous article).

IHP News is published by the Institute of Tropical Medicine (ITM) in Antwerp, Belgium. The newsletter is part of a larger effort to get people from the South involved in global health discussions and decision-making processes.
